Despite losing in the FIFA Interactive World Cup Final, pro gamer David Bytheway is still England's most successful sporting hero this summer – and now he's going to help you go all the way with this handy guide!

t's been another summer of hurt for England. But finally, we have got something to cheer about. Twenty-yearold Wolverhampton pro gamer David Bytheway booked his place at the FIFA Interactive World Cup in Brazil after a 100-game winning streak, and finished runner-up. And, when you think about it, he's the first Englishman to reach a World Cup Final since 1966! We grabbed a quick

We grabbed a quick chat to get his top tips to make sure you beat your mates every time...

MASTERING PENALTIES

"Believe it or not, there's no secret to taking penalties. Just like the real thing, it all comes down to practice. If you're having trouble, the only way to get better is to spend time in the practice arena and after a while, you'll get to know how much power and direction you can use to make sure you hit the top corner every time."

THE ULTIMATE MICRO-CONSOLE

PlayStation has got a tiny trick up its sleeve - and it's due out later this year. Here are five reasons why you definitely want to put the pocket-sized PS TV on your Christmas wishlist...

NEXT-GEN STREAMING

The hardware's biggest draw is it streams PS4 games. If the other half comes home and boots you off FIFA 15 because Armenia's Next Top Model is starting, all you need to do is pause the game and plonk yourself in front of whichever (secondary) TV you've hooked up to the tiny black box to continue playing the game from where you left off.

Even if you don't own a PlayStation 4, the great thing about PS TV is you can play PS1, PS2 and PS3 games through the PlayStation Now network. Better still, Sony says the system will have well over 1,000 titles available at launch, so the only thing you'll need to worry about is which game you want to play first...

SMALL BUT MIGHTY

You'll notice that we've kept referring to PlayStation TV as being ridiculously tiny - and that's because it genuinely is, compared to your modern console. Despite its numerous capabilities, the pocket rocket is roughly the same size as an iPhone, which means even if you live in a flat smaller than a hobbit's cupboard, you'll still have plenty of room to spare.

IT'S RECYCLING OLD TECH

Those PlayStation 3 controllers which have been gathering more dust than the FA's trophy cabinet now come in handy. After months of taking a backseat to the new PS4, you can recycle them to work with the PlayStation TV

CHEAP AS CHIPS

It will set you back £85, but when you consider you're effectively getting yourself a second PS4 - plus all the other great benefits that it comes with (like film and TV streaming) - it's really nothing at all. And don't forget it also means you won't have to keep watching all those shoddy TV shows with the missus - unless it's TOWIE, and we don't have to tell you why that's still worth

I was also invited to the Royal Box at SW19, which was a nice touch. It was a who's who of sport with David Beckham, Sachin Tendulkar, Bradley Wiggins, Anthony Joshua and Nicola Adams all there.

We had tea, scones and little salmon sandwiches. I'm not usually involved in civilised affairs like that, but I thoroughly enjoyed the day. The most impressive

EMAIL YOUR QUESTIONS FOR DAVID TO HAYEMAKER@ZOOTODAY.COM

Seeing the video of the England fan who had his ear bitten off in Brazil left a sour taste in my mouth. The culprit needs much more than a Hayemaker; they need to get the book thrown at them, banned from football for life and do serious time.

It's a shame because it's the minority that ruin it for everyone. They're not football fans; they're just hooligans.

Road runner

They closed the Blackwall Tunnel for 20 minutes last week because an early-morning jogger tried to run through it. To try and make a dash through London's busiest river crossing is crazy.

I got lost on a run in Poland once and ended up in a housing project that made some of our worst council estates look like Buckingham Palace. I was wearing an England top as well, which is probably why I was getting minimum love. It was a good thing I was running fast.

R&B moaner

I'll be giving Robin Thicke's new album a miss. It's named Paula, after his estranged wife Paula Patton, and is his attempt to win her back.

I understand he's heartbroken, because she's hot, but don't subject us all to your pain by putting out an album of you just whining and grovelling. It's pretty sad if you ask me. He should be trying to get her back on merit, not just by begging with a bit of melody.

ASK DAVID!

I can't believe Chile striker Mauricio Pinilla got a tattoo of his last-minute chance against Brazil that hit the bar, before his country got knocked out of the World Cup.

Talk about being scarred by failure. If I had to pick a tattoo of one of my sporting moments, I wouldn't choose a punch I missed in a fight that I lost. I would go for the Hayemaker that nearly toppled the giant Nikolai Valuev. That was something to remember.

Is this Bond's new ride?

- Aston Martin DP-100 leaves crowds shaken not stirred he car in front of you is an Aston Martin. We know that's hard to believe because a banzai blob of bonkers-ness has replaced the typically elegant styling and quintessentially British approach a certain 007 favours.

The Design Prototype 100 (DP-100) was hand-built by Aston's team of in-house engineers following a challenge set by the creators of Gran Turismo to conceive a virtual racer gamers could enjoy from the comfort of their sofas.

Brilliantly, Aston Martin took this task a little too seriously and actually manufactured a one-off machine that stunned crowds when it pulled into the Goodwood Festival Of Speed recently.

It boasts a blistering 800bhp twin-turbo V12 engine which sits slap-bang in the middle of that squat chassis – a first for the British marque, but a layout favoured by any self-respecting hypercar designer. Power is driven to the rear wheels and the body is designed to be as aerodynamic as possible without losing the typical Aston design elements, such as the "S-shaped" front grille and "C-shaped" rear lamps.

It even sports a fully functioning suspension set-up, but don't expect to see one on the roads soon. We do expect Daniel Craig to be pulling handbrake turns on the Moon in one, should the next Bond film be set in the future, though.

Fastest Range Rover ever: unveiled

A Range Rover Sport SVR ran up the hill this year, bursting eardrums with its evil exhaust note and tearing up the Tarmac with some 542bhp under the bonnet. The supercharged 5.0-litre V8 ensures it rockets from 0-62mph in just 4.8 seconds.

Ferocious Jaguar F-Type Project 7
A stripped-out F-Type race machine will be available for public consumption next year, and it packs a frankly ridiculous 567bhp, making it the most powerful road-going Jaguar ever. Expect near-200mph top speeds and styling influenced by the iconic D-Type of yesteryear.

Ariel Ace is, er, ace!
The British marque most famous for its insane Atom sportscar has unveiled its first stab at a modern superbike. The aptly-named Ace can be set up exactly to customer specifications, meaning each one is unique in its design. A chunky 173bhp engine lifted from a Honda VFR 1200 powers it – so expect supercar-bothering performance to boot.

The robots in disguise return for another action-packed outing, and although there's a lack of hot totty on show, director Michael Bay has upgraded the acting quality by ditching whiny cry baby Shia Labeouf in favour of gun-toting jock Mark Wahlberg.

There's a serious amount of over-the-top explosions to drool over, but the best thing about it is the Dinobots – the cult classic robots from the original TV series who transform into hard-as-nails dinosaurs.

Optimus Prime riding atop a fire-breathing T-rex while swinging a sword is the coolest thing to happen in four films, but annoyingly, the movie's biggest draw is under-used.

Age Of Extinction improves on the last film and is worth a watch – but only if you catch it on the big screen.

Starred Up

If you were, and still are, a Scum fan, then you might have been disappointed at the recent lull in decent British prison dramas. Until now. Eric (Jack O'Connell) plays a young troublemaker transferred ("starred up") from a young offender institution to the fullblown big house. With shockingly violent scenes from the off, this is one flick you won't forget in a hurry. ****

GRID Autosport

The spiritual successor to the TOCA Touring Car series gets a comprehensive update to the previously impressive GRID 2. It's very challenging, has plenty of testing new tracks on offer and easily manages to make its way onto the podium as one of the best driving games around. If only they'd given it the slick next-gen treatment as well. ★★★☆

Under The Skin

Imagine if Scarlett Johansson were to offer you a lift home when you're in a drunken stupor, before snogging your face off and inviting you back to hers. You oblige (obviously), but instead of the night of passion that you had in mind, she strips you of your muscle. It's one weird plot, that's for sure, but you do get to see her completely naked, so it's not all bad. ★★☆☆

The Stag

Stag dos: they fortify friendships and break the hardiest of drinkers. But what if you really didn't want one? Enter Fionnan, a dull bloke who is coerced into having a stag by his fiancée. He's also forced to invite his troublesome brother-inlaw "The Machine" and inevitable Hangover style chaos ensues. It's fairly formulaic, but you'll still laugh from start to finish.

HEY, DJ FRESH. WHAT ARE YOU UP TO?

I'm just back-stage at a Coldplay concert, taking it all in, feeling the amazing energy that those guys have.

REALLY?

As if. I'm actually just sitting on my sofa.

RIGHT... FESTIVAL SEASON IS UPON US! ARE YOU ENJOYING IT?

Absolutely, I definitely prefer doing outdoor events. Big arena shows are more forced; they rely on people being really drunk whereas festivals are more about being outside with friends, listening to good tunes in the glaring sunshine and dancing like a nutter. It's way more exciting to be a part of.

WHERE IS THE FESTIVAL SCENE MOST WILD?

That's a difficult one. Spanish and Italian festivals have this raucous energy, lots of booze lots of dreadlocks and, bizarrely, lots of dogs walking about! I did a festival in Shanghai last year and there were almost as many policemen in the crowd as there were festival-goers, which was probably a good thing because everyone was out of control! It was a bit like DJing in a prison camp – in a fun way. HOW WEIRD! HAVE YOU

ALWAYS LOVED FESTIVALS?

Yeah, when I was about 16, I jumped the fence to get free entry into Glasto. That was part of the allure. You'd never be able to get in that way these days. I wish I could say I remembered it more, but that was when I went through my pothead phase, so I was pretty much stoned the whole time!

WHAT'S YOUR No1 FESTIVAL ESSENTIAL?

Well, I've got two. Plastic bags: they're an absolutely dull must. And obviously wellies, but on that front, the best advice I can give would be to not get fulllength ones. Your legs will sweat and your feet will stink to high heaven. Hunter does these short ones that look like desert boots but are plastic. Honestly, you'll thank me for that tip.

NOW WE'VE GOT OUR FOOTWEAR SORTED, ANY TIPS FOR PULLING AT A FESTIVAL?

My MC gave me a tip and I'll never forget it. Hit the portaloo before you get down to business. Having to go for a quick slash will quickly ruin the romance!

ANY OTHER TIPS?

Don't worry about showering; just pour a bottle of water over yourself every now and again. One of the best things about a festival is that it makes you realise we don't really need many of our luxuries. They bring you back down to Earth and remind you that you can just shower with a bottle of water and you're not going to die!

ENGLAND'S NIGHTMARE We came, we saw, we absolutely fked it up

MARK SAYS... "Even with nothing to play for, England limped to a draw with Costa Rica. Roy sat there with a calculator, trying to work out if there was any possible way one point out of nine might just be enough. Still, at least there was time for the physio to get injured, which in terms of a comical mishap is a bit like a streaker running on fullyclothed, or a central defender leaving a huge gap for the world's most dangerous striker

Wazza's corner calamity to... oh, hang on."

Our £300k-a-week poster boy, who's unable to keep a corner in-play during the dying embers of a 2-1 defeat to Italy. Now that is laughable.

Paddy pop

While there wasn't a parade to welcome our crestfallen heroes home, there was this subtle slant from bookie, Paddy Power. Not that the players would have taken any notice, mind.

The goal that never was

We did it, you did it, even the official TV graphics did it. Everyone celebrated Raheem Sterling's "opener" just four minutes into the Three Lions' campaign, only to realise, well, that would never happen.

Hart attack

Heading for defeat and nowhere near a swirling Andrea Pirlo free-kick, who does Joe Hart take his boy. Poor kid was just trying to earn a buck.

Gary Lewin's fall

Hurrah! England have scored! Wait, what's that? The physio has slipped on a water bottle during the celebrations and broken his ankle? The ecstasy and agony of our nation summed up in one instant.

ITV's beach club vs the big boys of the Beeb - and Gary Lineker's glasses

MARK SAYS

"If you don't want it to look like you're having a glorious holiday, don't build studios quite literally on the beach. Glenn Hoddle managed to call Algeria 'Al Jazeera' (probably because he spent all afternoon sipping Margaritas on an inflatable lizard), while Gary Lineker has become a Homer Simpson lookalike. Robbie Savage stayed true to form, pretending he never used to kick his colleagues, all of whom have an 'old number' for him when they organise a night on the Copacabana."

Muller's mime

He may be a very good player, but acting is most certainly not Thomas Muller's forte. From the poorly choreographed stumble to the dreadful execution, this free-kick faux pas against Algeria even had ITV's clueless commentators chuckling.

bov Bruno

We knew Diego Costa was poor, but Bruno Martins Indi's "death eyes" took fear to a whole new level. As for his moans when the ref (didn't actually) spray foam on his feet? It's vanishing, Bruno. Chill.

Samba stinker

He's a crap striker and he's called Fred. Enough said.

Brazilian, you assume they

Then there's Fred, whose performances suggest he's actually just a guy called Fred,

Merked

Who says Germans don't have a sense of humour? Not Chancellor Angela Merkel, who posed for a selfie with the German players after they smashed Portugal. Fair play to her.

MANAGERS GONE MAD

Forget the players – these guys were the real stars in Brazil

Loew's nose

Poor Ronaldo. One goal, out in the group stages and the remnants of Germany boss Joachim Loew's bogies on his hands. And he thought he was untouchable.

Postie boy

He may claim his "dedicated" England days are behind him, but this typically English Postman Pat ensemble from Russia coach Fabio Capello suggests otherwise.

Mad Miguel
Celebrating like a loon, shoving
Robin van Persie and bundling his own players, Mexico's Miguel Herrera is a legend. Or "louse", as he's affectionately known.

MARK SAYS...
"As well as pulling every face in the book and borderline-assaulting his players, Herrera brought a sense of Central American paranoia. He made out Arjen Robben's penalty was the result of a conspiracy when, really, it was the result of him coming within 20m of the area."

FUNNY FANS

BRASH

MARK SAYS...

"My favourite fan moment? Those who see themselves on the big screen and forget all other considerations. 'We're out of the World Cup, this was the last chance for a lot of great players, maybe I'll die before we lift another trophy, maybe life is just a meaningless waste of... Holy sh*t! That's us on the big screen! Quick, grab me and wave for God's sake! Best night of my life!"

Rabona gone wrong Yes, Argentina's Angel di Maria did score a vital winner against Switzerland, but that's because he had to. This horrific attempt at showboating was so humorous, it almost rivalled that awesome Rooney corner.

OF THE WORLD CUP 2014

Toffee-gate

So, "Go eat a toffee" is said to be a major insult in South Korea, which is exactly what the squad were faced with when they landed back home - a bunch of flying toffees. Our boys got off lightly.

MARK SAYS... "South Korea's normally reserved fans lost their rag, serving the ultimate insult by getting the Werther's Originals out in Seoul. Several of the players were asked to comment but, obviously, their mouths were too gummed-up to talk."

SAMBA PSYCHIC He's seen it all before...

MARK SAYS... "So, we've had a camel forecasting Brazil's opening win, a lion which had Italy beating Costa Rica and an eel scooping £700,000 at Paddy Power by predicting the exact time of every corner when France took on Switzerland. With gullible folk queuing up to take predictions from goats and monkeys, the BBC jumped on board – and unveiled Mark Lawrenson."

Bumbling Brooks

We still can't work out whether USA's John Brooks was delighted or disgusted with his winner against Ghana. The fact the rest of the side lost patience and left him for dead just made the "celebration" even more memorable.

Ahmed Musa, Nigeria

£10_M, CSKA MOSCOW TO LIVERPOOL

After becoming the firstever Nigerian player to bag a World Cup brace, the fleet-footed winger registered on the scouting reports of Liverpool's talent-spotters. Ironic seeing as his goals came from running Argentine left-back Marcos Rojo ragged - the man the scouts were watching in the first place.

Daley Blind, Holland

£12_M, AJAX TO MANCHESTER UNITED

Stifling the Spanish Armada's tiki-taka and laying on a peach of a ball for Robin van Persie's swan-dive header – as well as containing Chile's Alexis Sanchez - has earned Blind many brownie points with Louis van Gaal. Now he's pencilled him in for a role in his Old Trafford revolution.

Despite Arsenal man Joel Campbell and Levante keeper Keylor Navas taking all the plaudits for surprise package Costa Rica, the sturdy displays of midfield linchpin Tejeda have not gone unnoticed. DeAndre Yedlin, USA

£1.5м, SEATTLE SOUNDERS TO SUNDERLAND

You'd be hard pressed to find a football man not impressed by the heroic exploits of the USMNT right-back. He shone when coming on as an early sub against Belgium, and Black Cats' scouts were so blown away, they handed in report cards on Yedlin instead of initial target Geoff Cameron.

I, GUYS. WHO'S GOT THE TOUGHEST OPPONENT ON SATURDAY NIGHT?

I don't know anything about Tony's opponent because I'm not interested, but Alejandro Valori comes to fight and is a rugged boxer. I have to take him to school if I want to push on at this weight.

w You only have to look at my record to realise who's got the most dangerous opponent: there's not even a debate. I always take the tougher names: that's just what I do.

YOU BOTH INTRODUCED YOURSELF TO THE CRUISERWEIGHT DIVISION WITH KNOCKOUT WINS. CAN YOU RATE EACH OTHER'S PERFORMANCE?

Nathan fought a guy who had been stopped in two rounds by Karo Murat - who Nathan himself actually stopped. He was actually beating up a victim of his former victim. It's a joke! He might be conning the public, but he's not fooling me. NC We both had pretty good debuts at the weight and put on solid displays. We were expected to win, so it doesn't matter whose opponent was tougher, or who had been in with whom.

NATHAN - YOU'RE GOING INTO THE LION'S DEN AGAIN. WILL YOU BE EXPECTING ANY SUPPORT ON FIGHT NIGHT?

No. I think it will be fairly hostile for me. There's going to be a large Liverpudlian support for the entire bill, not just for Tony. They'll be against me because of our rivalry, but I can thrive on that and use it as motivation.

ONE PERSON VERY MUCH IN THE CLEVERLY CORNER IS JOE CALZAGHE, WHO'S BACKING NATHAN TO BE A TWO-WEIGHT WORLD CHAMPION. DOES HE KNOW WHAT HE'S TALKING ABOUT, TONY?

TB Joe Calzaghe is a legend, and I have nothing but respect for him. But he's Nathan's pal, so he's got to say that. It's just a shame he can't fight for him, because he's 10 times the fighter Nathan is. Nathan needs someone to whisper sweet nothings in his ear and if Joe's going to do that, good on him.

YOU EMBRACED AND MADE UP AFTER THE FIRST FIGHT. WHAT HAS MADE THE BAD BLOOD RETURN?

After the first fight, we shook hands and he said it was the hardest fight he'd ever been in. Then he went into a room for the post-fight press conference and said he beat me easily. He said he didn't get out of second gear and he did it with two broken ribs, so he was basically calling me a sh*t fighter. That's unforgiveable in my opinion. To me, he's a liar and a bullsh*tter.

Tony's just a bitter t*sser. He contradicts himself: he thinks he's so good and yet on the two biggest stages of his career - when he fought for world titles against me and Adonis Stevenson - he was spanked. The guy just needs to shut up for a bit and start performing when he gets an opportunity instead of flopping.

SO, WHO NEEDS THE REMATCH MORE?

I've beaten him already and can happily walk away with my 1-0 victory. But I think the rematch is in order because we're both fighting at the same weight again and we're rivals. That's what sells in boxing. r I'm ranked higher in every cruiserweight organisation than Nathan Cleverly, so I don't need him. I'll fight him purely for my own personal reasons. I want to be the guy who makes him retire.

WITH THE FIRST FIGHT BEING HELD IN LIVERPOOL, DOES THE REMATCH HAVE TO BE IN WALES?

TB I'd fight him in his living room; it doesn't bother me. Unfortunately, he couldn't sell out his living room. If he was fighting in my garden I'd close the curtains, so I can understand the fans. He's got to come to Liverpool because his town doesn't make sense. Tony makes me laugh. He's a bitter gobsh*te who's going to get another spanking wherever we do it. The venue decision is purely a promotional issue as in Cardiff, the venues are either too small or too big. Maybe it means going back to Liverpool or a neutral venue, like Manchester or London.

WHAT P*SSES YOU OFF MOST ABOUT THE OTHER?

Tony talks and talks as if he's this big technical, superior boxer. He's too serious and ultimately doesn't like the fact he's come across somebody, like myself, who doesn't take boxing as seriously as him but still beats him. He can't handle that.

TB What p*sses me off most? That fking bandana! He thinks he's Daniel LaRusso from The Karate Kid. The most annoying thing though is the two-faced comments he came out with after our fight. That's what really gets to me. Trust me; after the rematch, he will pay for those comments.

ALASTAIR-COOK Should he stay, or should he go?

Whitewashed in the Ashes and humiliated by Sri-Lanka, we look at the arguments for and against —the England captain ahead of the upcoming—

—do-or-die Test series against the might of India—

"A calming presence!"

Stuart Broad, England bowler and Twenty20 captain

"Things can be built up from outside the bubble of the dressing room with so much chatter going on, but when we are in there, Cooky is very much his usual, calm self.

"He's always been a calm presence in the dressing room, and he still is that. It's what has made him the world-class player he has been over the past decade.

"Cooky has played over 100 Test matches and he passed Sir Geoff Boycott to become England's fifthhighest run scorer of all time. You don't achieve something like that without being made of strong stuff."

"Rabbit in the headlights!"

Kevin Pietersen, ex-England batsman

"The players are not turning up for the captain or coach, and that says there's an underlying current of unhappiness.

"The last tour to Australia was hard: we were beaten up due to a lot of reasons, and some of the senior players are still suffering and struggling to offer leadership in the dressing room.

"At Headingley [in the second Test defeat to Sri Lankal, I saw in Cook the same look Andrew Strauss had when he played his last Test at Lord's – a rabbit in the headlights."

"Intelligent and determined!"

Duncan Fletcher. former England coach

"There were two things that struck me about Alastair. Firstly, I thought he was a very intelligent cricketer who understood the game.

"In the very first team meeting he came to, he confidently stood up and said, 'This player does this and this player does that'and very few players are prepared to commit to something like that at such an early stage in the England squad.

"He's also very determined. If you had to pick batters on their mental aspects, two of them would be that they have to be determined and stubborn. Alastair has got those."

"Cooked and confused!"

Shane Warne, secondhighest Test wicket-taker of all time

"There are three ways to go with Alastair Cook. One: everyone can stick their head in the sand and hope he finds form with the bat and discovers some tactical brains from somewhere.

"Two: he steps down from the captaincy to concentrate on his batting.

"Three: he has a complete break away from the game.

"I think it is time for him to step down as captain. He's not thinking straight, is confused and doesn't know what to do and, because of the rut he's in, it makes life a lot worse.

"You cannot captain a team in transition if you're in that frame of mind."
